Washington, D.C. 20002 USA

In 2001, the Institutions and Governance Program at World Resources Institute launched a comparative policy research project on the structure and outcomes of natural resource decentralizations. The project was entitled: Accountability, Decentralization and the Environment: Local Democracy and Natural Resources in Sub-Saharan Africa.* The publication, Waiting for Democracy: The Politics of Choice in Natural Resource Decentralization, provides a synthesis of the findings for this project.

The initial project included cases in Mali, Cameroon, Uganda, Zimbabwe, and South Africa. Comparative cases were also later included from Mozambique, Tanzania, and Senegal. Based on a meeting the project held at Bellagio in 2002, the project was able to include cases from Latin America: Nicaragua, Bolivia, Brazil, and Mexico; and from Asia: China, Mongolia, India, Indonesia, and Nepal.

Following is a list of publications that derive directly from the preparation and research conducted under this initiative. The list also includes publications coming out of the next generation of research on decentralization and the environment under two new initiatives "Institutional Choice and Recognition in Democratic Decentralization" and "Commodity Chain Analysis as a policy Tool."** The first initiative is deepening our understanding of representation in decentralization reforms and the second is exploring the distribution of economic benefits that follow from natural resource decentralization initiatives. The publications below include publications by WRI and by our research partners from all of our decentralization research efforts.

Film and Video

NEW: "Weex Dunx and the Quota: Plucking Local Democracy in Senegal," A film by Jesse C. Ribot, (Twenty-four minute video—Wolof with English and French subtitles)
Synopsis: Mr. Weex Dunx (Mr. Scapegoat), the elected President of the Rural Council of Nambaradougou (Place of many problems), is ecstatic to learn that new decentralization laws have given his council the right to manage and use forests. The council now has the right to decide how much woodcutting will take place in their jurisdiction and who gets to do the cutting and selling. But, when Weex Dunx tries to exercise his new powers he is confronted by incredulous foresters, administrators and merchants who are in shock that he thinks he can make decisions about the forests. Exasperated because these powerful notables don't like him if he resists and his people don't like him if he gives in, Weex Dunx is torn between doing what is right for his community and surrendering to pressures from powerful people whom he does not want to disappoint. Copies on DVD or CD can be provided on request. The research for this film is presented in [WORKING PAPER #36 listed above.] Please visit the WRJ web page to view the film.
